Miner's Lamp

Mining Engineer 'Sir Humphrey Davey' is one of the best known scientists to have worked in Bristol. His invention of the Miner's safety lamp also known as the 'Davey lamp' has seen many versions since he first designed it in 1850. These lamps are self extinguishing if they fall. Underground mine explosions were often caused by methane gas which is odourless hence impossible for humans to detect by smell. Our miner's lamps are inspired by the original Davey lamp. They are made of solid brass & ignited by a cotton wick. Common household lamp oil is recommended for use in them. Illumination is limited but it will burn overnight with one filling of oil.

Brass Paraffin Lamp

This is a simple lamp made of brass. It utilises an oil burner with a cotton wick. Flame control is achieved by twirling a brass knob that controls the movement of the cotton wick. Common household paraffin or lamp oil is sufficient to operate it. The glass flute gives the flame protection against the wind & channels the smoke away. This lamp is reminiscent of an illumination technique of the days gone past. One filling is sufficient for the whole evening. It throws light in all directions.
